The establishment of a formalized legal system took shape during the reign of King George Tupou I in the late 1800s, who sought to consolidate power and modernize governance. Throughout the colonial era, Tonga maintained a unique status as a constitutional monarchy, which differed from many neighboring nations subjected to direct colonial rule.

As Britain's electricity system operator, we're right at the forefront of that global effort. But the scale and urgency of the task can only be met by working together with others around the world. Today, I'm privileged to be speaking alongside the US and UK energy secretaries at the launch of the Global Power System Transformation (G-PST) ...
